Classification Review Procedure

CRP 81-1

CIA Documents Containing Possible Copyrighted Material

1. Certain types of CIA documents occasionally will contain copyrighted material from non-official books, newspapers, and journals. While acknowledgement of the use of this material is sometimes found in the source references, often no citations at all are provided. Under the "fair use" theory, CIA may not be legally vulnerable for using copyrighted materials without permission of the author(s) since it was not used for gain and the distribution was limited to government agencies. There is now, however -- with some documents being declassified -- the risk that a third party, unaware of copyright involvement, might republish such material and become legally liable. In such cases, CIA, too, may be held liable. To avoid this, the stamp indicated below will be used to warn such a third party of this danger and ensure that the Government will have an opportunity to review copyright implications prior to public dissemination of these documents.

THIS DOCUMENT MAY CONTAIN COPYRIGHTED
MATERIAL AND SHOULD BE REFERRED TO THE
OFFICE OF THE GENERAL COUNSEL BEFORE
PUBLIC RELEASE

2. Copyrighted material is most likely to be found in CIA finished intelligence reports and memoranda produced by offices within NFAC and its predecessor organization, the DDI. Many examples are found in the National Intelligence Surveys published between 1951 and 1974. Occasionally, copyrighted material will be found in DDS&T reports and publications. Although less common, copyrighted material may also be found in those reports which were essentially based on overt and non-classified sources such as in the areas of economic, political, geographical and other social science fields, and scientific and technical journals. Particular attention should be paid to published issuances from the following offices and their predecessors.

The Office of Economic Research
The Office of Political Analysis
The Office of Geographic and Societal Research
Foreign Broadcast Information Service
The National Photographic Interpretation Center

3. To determine whether documents contain copyrighted material, the reviewer should first turn to any index, bibliography, or list of sources that may be included. Also, unattributed quotations, photographs, and graphics should be checked carefully. The great majority of sources will be official government, either from intelligence or non-intelligence agencies. Nevertheless, we must use great care to ensure that the Agency is properly protected against possible violations of a copyright. If you have any doubts, check with other reviewers and your Branch Chief. If doubt remains, use the stamp.
